Georg Brandes (Copenhagen: Gyldendal, 1903)

The thirteenth volume of Brandes's collected works is a supplementary volume (Supplement-bind) gathering his principal contributions to the Tro og Viden controversy of the 1860s, together with several longer critical essays. The philosophical core is the two sections on the faith–knowledge dispute: Striden om Tro og Viden (pp. 5–42) and Dualismen i vor nyeste Filosofi (pp. 43–84). A full OCR text of the volume is available at Project Runeberg (<https://runeberg.org/gbsamskr/13/>).

Notes on individual pieces

Indledning (pp. 1–4). Brandes's preface to the volume, dated April 1903, explaining the rationale for collecting these earlier polemical writings.

Striden om Tro og Viden (pp. 5–42). A sequence of polemical articles from the controversy of the mid-1860s, most originally published in newspapers and journals. The first piece, Samvittighed og Videnskab (pp. 7–10), is a review of A.-C. Larsen's book of the same title (1866), a theological response to Nielsen. Brandes notes that Nielsen's standpoint invites attack from two directions: from theologians he is too radical, and from secularists he remains too theological. Gensvar til Dr. Heegaard (pp. 34–39) is a direct response to a Nielsen disciple.

Dualismen i vor nyeste Filosofi (pp. 43–84). The centerpiece of the volume: Brandes's sustained philosophical attack on Nielsen's absolute separation of faith and knowledge. Structured in four parts. Corresponds to the 1866 monograph Dualismen i vor nyeste Philosophie (note the modernized spelling in the collected works). The most philosophically substantial piece in the volume.

R. Nielsens Lære om Tro og Viden (pp. 106–109). A compact later statement directly on Nielsen's doctrine.

Den franske Æstetik i vore Dage (pp. 137ff.). Longer critical essay on French aesthetics; less directly relevant to the faith–knowledge debate.

Note: page numbers for the final three entries (Den herskende Evne, Kritiken) are not yet confirmed from the OCR source and are marked [?].
